

Being that the Amateur Radio Service's main charter the development of a pool of experienced communicators for use in disasters and emergencies, and as CW is still among the top 2 most effective modes of communications under stress of low power availability and high noise conditions, the minimal morse code proficiency requirement should not only be kept, but even brought back to VHF and above.